

ALEXANDER
MCQUEEN
Resene
Roadster

BALENCIAGA
Resene
Yes Please

HILLIER
BARTLEY
Resene
Green Smoke

CHANEL
Resene
Pink Ribbon

KWAIDAN EDITIONS
Resene
Hive

HERMÈS
Resene
Karaka

TALBOT
RUNHOF
Resene
Kryptonite

THE SHINING

A key trending category from Fall 2019 were textiles of a shiny nature. Unlike glitter, these gleaming fabrics pushed their looks to the next level. Alexander McQueen's finale look of its Fall 2019 ready-to-wear collection featured a bold red satin avant-garde garment in a colour close to Resene Roadster. This material was a staple in the show alongside some other reflective textiles. This bold cyan look was not out of place at Balenciaga's Paris Fashion Week show. Showcasing their Fall 2019 ready-to-wear range, the show opened with clean suiting in a variety of greys and blacks which quickly turned to an exciting palette of yellows, pinks, and blues like this cyan look similar to Resene Yes Please. Hillier Bartley brought pops of colours and patterns to their Fall 2019 collection. With languid proportions, drapes, folds, knots and ties; the range featured a welcomed palette of white, red and beige. Standing out like a sore thumb, these playful punk-esque pants boasted a look-at-me colour like Resene Green Smoke.

A Winter wonderland was Chanel's Fall 2019 show at Paris Fashion Week. Bringing the '80s back, Chanel's looks oozed luxurious ski bunnies like this monochrome look in a hue like Resene Pink Ribbon. 1970 collars ruled the runway at Kwaidan Editions' ready-to-wear show at Paris Fashion Week. The Fall range erupted with longline lapelled coats, turtle necks and a minimalist '70s over wash. This exciting print look in a colour close to Resene Hive was a highlight of the collection. Hermès honoured their house dress code and did what they did best. However, this jacket in their Fall 2019 show injected a touch of utilitarian. Made of a semi-gloss leather in a hue like Resene Karaka; the piece features oversized pockets finished with a braided stitch detail. The same leather was omnipresent throughout the collection at Paris Fashion Week. Filled with lavender, hot pink and a green close to Resene Kryptonite; Talbot Runhof showcased a playful collection using shiny fabrics. As seen at Paris Fashion Week, this Fall 2019 ready-to-wear collection was packed with feminine looks that were loud, chic and ultimately, relaxed. 🐰